

What does a OneMusic licence mean to your business?

- 1 Permission. When you play music that is protected by copyright in your business, New Zealand law requires permission (a licence) from the creators.
- 2 It shows your business respects and supports music creators who spend countless hours learning and creating the music your business wants to use.
- 3 You benefit by playing music. Music creates a better atmosphere, and keeps you, your staff and your customers entertained and engaged.

81% of people work more accurately when listening to music¹

87% say playing music in the workplace increases staff morale²

79% feel that music listening to music improves their job satisfaction and productivity³

“ I think copyright is an amazing thing. Somewhere back in history, someone created legislation that allowed artists to get paid. Copyright makes me feel that my work’s not for nothing. It’s hard enough to be a musician. If we didn’t have mechanisms to protect our work, it would be almost impossible.

Bic Runga. Artist, Songwriter and APRA Board Writer Representative.

Music in your business is different to listening to music at home

The change in scenery means a change in the rights, and you need permission to play music in your business.

The music we consume every day is made available to us for personal or domestic use only. When you use music in your business, legally this is considered a public performance.

This includes music in all forms, from streaming, to CDs and even talkback radio and television.

Check us out: Check the terms and conditions on your CDs and online. You’ll find statements like “personal use only” or “not authorised for public performance”.

You can also make checks about the authenticity of our rights here:

What is the Copyright Act?

The Copyright Act 1994 grants music creators exclusive rights over how their work is used, and provides a legal framework to enable them to earn a living from their art.

They are businesses too, and granting permission to businesses to play what they have created is one of the ways music creators earn an income.

New Zealand is not unique, and businesses in countries around the world also need to get permission or a licence for their music use.

Where does your licence fee go?

Your OneMusic licence fee is distributed by APRA AMCOS and Recorded Music NZ, who are the companies behind OneMusic. Each organisation has a commitment to their music creators and their own distribution policies.

Many music creators around the world earn an income by giving organisations, like ours, the right to collect and pay their royalties when a business plays the music they make.

When you hear about music royalties, that's what we do.

We match what is being played and distribute to the songwriters, composers, publishers, recording artists and record labels who make and own the music you play your business.

Each month we analyse over 330 million lines of music data from streaming services, background music suppliers, radio stations, television stations, live performers and more.

What we do isn't simple, but we make it simple for you.

It's about striking a balance between accuracy and efficiency, which is why we do not expect you to supply us with your song lists. After minimal administration costs all money collected is paid to our local and international music creators as royalties.

How it works

1. Businesses get a OneMusic licence

You gain the legal permission needed to play our music in your business.

2. Music creators get paid royalties

Your licence fee is distributed by APRA AMCOS and Recorded Music NZ.

3. Businesses play music

Music enhances your business, and you benefit by entertaining staff and customers.

4. Music creators keep making music

Crafting music takes time, money and creativity, and your licence is part of the process.

“Music touches the lives of people across the globe. The licence fees businesses pay to play music recognise the value of music, and the huge amount of time, craft and money it takes to create it.

Iva Lamkum.
Artist and Songwriter.
